An Open Letter to Taoiseach Leo Varadkar

Dear Taoiseach

RE: WORKING GROUP ON ALTERNATIVE APPROACHES TO CRIMINALISATION OF POSSESSION OF DRUGS FOR PERSONAL USE

We, the undersigned, are writing to you in relation to the Report of the Working Group on Alternative Approaches to criminalisation for possession of drugs for personal use. We are aware that a memo based on the recommendations of the Report will shortly be brought to Cabinet and we wish to express our concern at the indications that, while it will recommend a system for diversion to health services, which is very welcome, it will also recommend maintaining the criminal status of possession of drugs for personal use.

The terms of reference for the Working Group were drawn up in line with the key principles of the National Drugs Strategy Reducing Harm Supporting Recovery, which are based on a compassionate and humane approach to drug use and aligned to the public health goals of improving health and reducing harms caused by drugs. Indications are that the report of the Working Group will affirm the benefits of diverting people who use drugs from the justice system to the health system, as supported by the evidence base. The public consultation process carried out by the Working Group shows that the vast majority of respondents are of the view that criminalising drug use does not prevent or reduce drug use, a view that is strongly supported by the international evidence, and there is overwhelming support for change to the current approach to simple possession offences.

In this context, we are now seriously concerned at the indications that the Working Group is saying that while it recommends implementing a diversion approach, this should only be done if at the same time we maintain criminal status for possession for personal use and maintain the right to impose potential criminal sanctions on people who use drugs. We acknowledge and appreciate the work and commitment of the Working Group members, but we believe that such a recommendation is both contradictory and lacking in logic, in that it appears to say that we need to maintain criminalisation in order to implement a health-led approach, on the basis that the legal changes required to decriminalise possession for personal use would be too complicated.

If such a recommendation is accepted by government, we are effectively saying that we in Ireland are not capable of implementing a policy change that is evidence based, supported by the public and in line with our NDS, because the legal changes required may be too complicated. How many progressive policy changes might never have been made if that approach was generally adopted by government? It may be complicated, but does that mean it should not be done? Surely in a modern 21st century democracy we have the technical capacity to draft the legal changes that are required to implement the policies we believe are right?

All across Europe, and indeed further afield, people are looking to Ireland as a country that will continue to lead on progressive drugs policy and your own commitment to bringing about this progressive change is appreciated. As a society we are making significant steps forward in recognising and challenging drug-related stigma and the damage and despair that it causes for individuals, families and communities; it is simply unthinkable that we would now compound that stigma by making a conscious decision, after due consideration, to maintain the ultimate stigma of criminalising people for what we accept is a health issue.

With this in mind, we are asking that you as Taoiseach will lead the government in welcoming and accepting the proposals to set up a model for referral to health and support services, but also show leadership by directing that the government’s legal experts give further consideration to drafting the legislation required in order to remove the criminal status of possession for personal use.

Yours sincerely
